IVY CHAMPIONS

A History of Ivy Titles

A total of 25 Ivy League titles, all of them in the last 41 years.

Three straight Ivy titles, five of the last six, seven of the last nine, and 11 since 1992-93.

Twelve players with a combined 15 Ivy League Player of the Year honors, and six Ivy League Rookies of the Year.

Forty players who have been accorded a total of 64 first-team All-Ivy awards, including seven three-time first-teamers.

A quick run through Penn's basketball annals since the start of the Ivy League in 1956 reveals a program that has long been considered the class of the Ivy League.

It spans teams that dominated the early 1970s, not only winning Ivy and Big 5 titles but annually finishing among the top teams in the nation; the 1979 squad, which parlayed its Ivy title into a magical run that ended at the NCAA Final Four thanks to a guy named Magic Johnson; the teams of the mid-1990s, which stopped a notable Princeton title run and made history themselves with a record-setting winning streak against the Ancient Eight; and the teams of the 21st century, four of which already can claim crowns.

It spans coaches like Dick Harter and Chuck Daly—who went on to stellar NBA careers—to Fran Dunphy and now Glen Miller, who have continued to set the standard of excellence in recent years.

It covers players like Stan Pawlak and Jeff Neuman, three-time first-team All-Ivy players who captained the Quakers to their first Ivy title in 1966; Corky Calhoun, the Eastern Player of the Year in 1972 (before the Ivy League awarded such an honor); Ron Haigler, Penn's first Ivy League Player of the Year; Perry Bromwell, the mighty guard who returned Penn to prominence in the mid-1980s; Matt Maloney and Jerome Allen, the focal points in the backcourt of Penn's historic teams from 1993-95; Michael Jordan—the "other" one—who made a name for himself by earning Ivy Player of the Year and captaining an Ivy championship squad; Ugonna Onyekwe, the two-time Ivy League Player of the Year who led his team back to Ivy glory in 2002 and an undefeated campaign his senior season; and most recently Ibrahim Jaaber, the Quakers' most recent two-time Ivy League Player of the Year.

1965-66

19-6 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League

Head Coach Jack McCloskey certainly knew how to go out in style; the 10-year Penn mentor closed out his Quaker career by finally leading the program to its first Ivy League title after a series of near misses (Penn had been second or third the previous six seasons). Led by senior captains Stan Pawlak and Jeff Neuman—both of whom would earn first-team All-Ivy for the third straight season—the Quakers reeled off an 11-2 start to the season, including a sweep of the first four Ivy games. A slight hiccup occurred at Princeton, when the Tigers took a 75-68 decision. Penn came back strong from that, though, winning seven in a row before losing at Cornell in the penultimate game of the season, 81-76. In the season finale, the Quakers clinched the title with a 56-48 win over Princeton at The Palestra.

1969-70

25-2 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

Head Coach Dick Harter led the Quakers to their second Ivy title with a perfect 14-0 record in the Ancient Eight in 1969-70—Penn's first unblemished league mark, but certainly not its last. The Quakers opened the season with a 115-79 rout of Muhlenberg, and went on to a 7-0 start before falling to Purdue, 88-85, in the ECAC Holiday Festival. Penn did not drop another game until the NCAA Tournament, where Niagara handed the Quakers a 10-point loss, 79-69, in the first round. Penn claimed just its second Philadelphia Big 5 title with convincing wins over all four schools, and the Quakers ranked as high as seventh nationally before finishing the season ranked 13th in both the Associated Press (AP) and United Press International (UPI) polls. Corky Calhoun, who was named Penn's MVP, and Steve Bilsky were named first-team All-Ivy, while Robert Morse was accorded second-team honors.

1970-71

28-1 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

Arguably the finest team in the program's storied history, the 1970-71 Quakers finished the regular season undefeated at 26-0 before heading to the NCAA Tournament for the second-straight year. Penn won the Ivy League title with little competition—except for a four-point overtime win over Princeton at The Palestra, Penn's average margin of victory was 21.5 points per game. Head Coach Dick Harter led the Quakers into the NCAA Tournament where they faced Duquesne in the first round and won, 70-65. South Carolina came next, and the Quakers improved their win streak to 28 games with a 79-64 victory. Unfortunately, Villanova had much improved since the teams' first meeting (a 78-70 Penn win on January 23), and the Wildcats pounded the Quakers, 90-47, to send Penn back to Philadelphia. The Quakers finished the season with the No. 3 ranking from the AP and UPI polls; Dave Wohl was named ECAC All-Division I, first-team All-Ivy, Penn MVP and All-District along with Steve Bilsky and Corky Calhoun.

1971-72

25-3 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

The Penn duo of Corky Calhoun and Robert Morse made some major waves in their senior season, which was head coach Chuck Daly's first campaign at Penn. After Penn's phenomenal campaign in 1970-71, the Quakers came back and won another Ivy League championship (falling only to Princeton, 69-56, at Jadwin) and the Big 5 Championship with a 3-1 record. The duo led the Quakers into the NCAA Tournament where they defeated Providence, 76-60, in the first round and Villanova, 78-67, in the second round before succumbing to North Carolina, 73-59, in the East Regional Final. After ranking as high as second in the AP poll, Penn again finished the season ranked third in both the AP and UPI polls. Calhoun was named Eastern Player of the Year, while Morse was named District Player of the Year, and both were named first-team All-Ivy along with Phil Hankinson.

1972-73

21-7 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League

And the Quakers keep on winning — Ivy League championships, that is. Daly won his second consecutive Ivy title, and the fourth-straight for the Penn basketball program in 1973. Phil Hankinson and Ron Haigler were the big names this season, as both were named All-East and All-Ivy League, and Hankinson racked up All-Big 5 and AP All-State accolades, while Haigler was named ECAC Rookie of the Year and Ivy Sophomore of the Year. The Quakers made their way to yet another NCAA Tournament and defeated St. John's by one point, 62-61, to move on to the second round. The Quakers found themselves against a familiar foe—Providence—but this time they fell to the Friars, 87-65. Penn then fell, 69-68, to Syracuse in the consolation game to end the season.

1973-74

21-6 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

The Quakers won their fifth consecutive Ivy League championship, falling only to Brown, 66-65, in Providence. Penn also won the Philadelphia Big 5 championship with a perfect 4-0 record, which included an 83-61 rout of Villanova at The Palestra. Junior Ron Haigler and ECAC Rookie of the Year John Engles helped lead the Quakers into the NCAA Tournament for the fifth-straight year, but for the second consecutive season their quest for the national title fell at the hands of Providence, 84-69. Haigler and John Beecroft were both named first-team All-Ivy League, and Haigler was also named first-team All-Big 5 and AP All-State.

1974-75

23-5 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

Head Coach Chuck Daly served up his fourth consecutive Ivy League title with a 13-1 record in the Ancient Eight in 1974-75. The Quakers went undefeated at home in The Palestra until the final game of the season, when Penn fell to Kansas State, 69-62, in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. The Quakers began the season by winning the Clemson Tournament, besting Middle Tennessee State and Clemson, then shot out to a 6-0 record before falling to Ohio State in the Rainbow Classic, where Ron Haigler was named MVP. Haigler also earned a few other accolades this season, including Philadelphia Big 5 and Ivy League Player of the Year, third-team All-American, All-East, All-District, first-team All-Big 5 and first-team All-Ivy after averaging 21.6 points per game.

1977-78

20-8 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League

There was not a whole lot left to say about Keven McDonald on his graduation day in 1978. The senior tri-captain was named Ivy League and Big 5 Player of the Year, was the Ivy League scoring leader, Carolina Classic MVP, and earned first-team All-Big 5 and All-Ivy League honors. He also led the Quakers to the Eastern Regional of the NCAA Tournament. Penn finished the Ivy season with losses to just Dartmouth and Columbia to take home the first Ivy title for first-year head coach Bob Weinbauer, and headed into the NCAA Tournament. The Quakers defeated St. Bonaventure, 92-83, at The Palestra in the first round, but then fell to Duke in the second round in Providence, 84-80, to end the season.

1978-79

25-7 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

After an impressive start to the season, the Quakers coasted to an 85-72 win over Cornell on Feb. 24, wrapped up the Ivy League title with three games still to go, and became the first team in the nation to qualify for the NCAA Tournament. Seniors Tony Price and Bobby Willis led the Quakers to a 73-69 win over Iona in the preliminary round of the NAAs to start the magical ride of 1979. The Quakers traveled to Raleigh, N.C. for a first-round meeting with North Carolina and stunned the Tar Heels, 72-71. Syracuse was next, and Penn won that game, 84-76, to move on to the Eastern Regional Final against St. John's in Greensboro, N.C. Another nailbiter ensued, but the Quakers came out victorious, 64-62, and Penn fans made their travel plans for the Quakers' first trip to the Final Four. Price, who had led the Quakers in scoring all season averaging 19.8 points per game, combined with Tim Smith for 27 of Penn's 35 second-half points and was named MVP of the Eastern Regional. Although very exciting for the first-time program, Penn found itself overmatched by Michigan State—led by a precocious sophomore named Earvin “Magic” Johnson—and fell, 101-67, in the national semifinal. The Quakers then fell again in the consolation game, 96-93, in overtime to DePaul to finish their storybook season with a 25-7 overall record. Price finished the season as the Ivy League and Big 5 Player of the Year, and the Quakers finished the season 14th in the Associated Press poll.

1979-80

17-12 Overall; 11-3 Ivy League (co-champions)

After such a successful season in 1978-79, fans wondered whether there would be any gas left in 1980 for the Quakers to make another run at the Ancient Eight title. Fortunately, there was plenty as Penn went 11-3 in the Ivy League and ended up tying Princeton for the crown. The teams met in a one-game playoff in Easton, Pa., for the right to represent the Ivy League at the NCAA Tournament, and in a thrilling affair the Quakers defeated the Tigers, 50-49, behind captain James Salters' 15 points. Penn went on to represent the Ivy League in the NCAA Tournament and defeated Washington State, 62-55, in West Lafayette, Ind. Unfortunately, Duke stood in the way of another return trip to the Final Four, and the Blue Devils handed the Quakers a 52-42 loss to end the season.

1980-81

20-8 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League (co-champions)

The Quakers ended the 1981 basketball season as co-champions of the Ivy League with Princeton, as the teams shared identical 13-1 Ancient Eight records after splitting the season series—Princeton won 62-61 in Princeton; Penn rolled 52-43 at The Palestra—and sweeping the rest of the league. For the second-straight season, the teams met in a one-game playoff to determine the NCAA bid; this time, the Tigers defeated the Quakers, 54-40, at Lafayette, and went on to the NCAA Tournament. But with Penn's excellent Ivy League season, and a 20-7 regular season mark, the Quakers made their first and only NIT appearance against West Virginia on March 13. Unfortunately, the Quakers could not hang on and fell, 67-64, to the Mountaineers in the first round. Senior Kenneth Hall was named first-team All-Ivy.

1981-82

17-10 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League

After sharing the Ivy League crown with Princeton for two consecutive years, the Quakers left nothing to chance in 1982. They swept the Tigers with a pair of three-point victories, then went 10-2 against the rest of the league to win the championship outright. Talk about a streaky team—Penn started the season with three wins, lost nine in a row (including Ivy games at Brown and Yale to start the conference campaign), then rebounded to win its last 14 regular-season games in a row. As a result, the Quakers were paired with St. John's in the NCAA Tournament first round in Uniondale, N.Y., where they lost to the Redmen, 66-56. At the end of the seasons, Paul Little was named Co-Ivy League Player of the Year.

1984-85

13-14 Overall; 10-4 Ivy League

The Quakers had a rough start to open the 1984-85 season, going 0-7 before winning their first game of the campaign, 81-80, over Davidson in the Far West Classic. But fear not—Penn recovered and went on to claim the Ivy League title, its fourth of the 1980s, behind first-team All-Ivy honoree Perry Bromwell. At one point, the Quakers reeled off eight straight wins before falling to Princeton, 49-47, at The Palestra. Following the regular season, the Quakers traveled to Houston, Texas for the first round of the NCAA Tournament where they fell, 67-55, to Memphis State.

1986-87

13-14 Overall; 10-4 Ivy League

Ivy League Player of the Year Perry Bromwell led Tom Schneider's first Penn team to its 13th Ivy title with a 10-4 record in 1986-87. Bromwell was also named first-team All-Ivy, Penn MVP and Penn's Best Defensive Player, while teammate Bruce Lefkowitz was also named first-team All-Ivy. The Quakers pulled out of a tough Ancient Eight race with a one-point overtime win against Princeton on Feb. 3, and victories over Brown and Yale in the final two games of the regular season to earn the right to play North Carolina in the first round of the NCAA Tournament and fell, 113-82, to the Tar Heels.

1992-93

22-5 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

The Quakers put a stop to a celebrated four-year run of titles by Princeton, and began a historic run of their own with their first Ivy League championship under Head Coach Fran Dunphy. It was just the second undefeated Ivy season since 1976, and it was Penn's first unblemished run through the conference since the famed 1970-71 team. The unbeaten season nearly went by the boards in the season finale, however; the Quakers had to pull a rabbit out of their hat to get by Princeton, 52-51, at the Tigers' Jadwin Gym. Jerome Allen became the first sophomore to be named Ivy League Player of the Year and was joined on the All-Ivy first team by fellow guard Matt Maloney. The Quakers fell to Massachusetts, 54-50, in Dunphy's first trip to the NCAA Tournament.

1993-94

25-3 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

Ivy League Player of the Year Jerome Allen helped continue the Quakers' Ivy League win streak as Penn recorded another 14-0 Ancient Eight season, just the second back-to-back undefeated Ivy League championships in league history. In fact, Penn lost just three games during the entire season, including a 70-58 loss to Florida in the second round of the NCAA Tournament. Prior to that, though, the Quakers recorded their first postseason win since 1980 with a 90-80 victory over Nebraska. Head Coach Fran Dunphy also saw his team crack the AP poll for the first time since 1979; the Quakers finished the season ranked 25th in the nation by the USA Today/CNN coaches poll.

1994-95

22-6 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

Penn began the season on a high note by winning the 1994 ECAC Holiday Festival at Madison Square Garden and then ended the season on a higher note by winning its 17th Ivy League championship trophy. Senior guards Matt Maloney and Jerome Allen were all the rage, as they helped lead the team to a program and national-record 42 consecutive Ivy League wins and their third consecutive Ivy title. Maloney snatched Ivy League Player of the Year honors from his backcourt mate; they both earned first-team All-Ivy for the third-straight year while three teammates—Ira Bowman, Shawn Trice and Eric Moore—were second-team selections. In the NCAA Tournament, the Quakers just missed pulling off a first-round upset of Alabama in Baltimore, Md., falling 91-85.

1995-96

17-10 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League (co-champions)

The Quakers continued their dynasty of Ivy Championships in 1995-96, but had to share the spoils with Princeton. Even though the Quakers defeated the Tigers twice during the regular season, they fell on the road to Dartmouth—snapping an Ivy-record 48-game conference win streak—and Yale to finish in a tie at the end of the season. A one-game playoff ensued at Stabler Arena in Bethlehem, Pa., and the Quakers were defeated, 63-56, allowing Princeton to represent the Ivy League in the NCAA Tournament (the Tigers would go on to knock off defending national champion UCLA in the first round). Senior co-captain Ira Bowman was named Ivy League Player of the Year, the fourth-straight year a Penn player earned the award.

1998-99

21-6 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

In one of the most shocking games of all time, the 6-0 Quakers fell to Princeton, 50-49, for their first and what would be their only loss of the Ivy League season. Penn had a 33-9 lead at halftime, sending the Palestra faithful into a frenzy. Unfortunately, what plagued Princeton in the first half seemed to catch up with Penn in the second stanza, as the Quakers seemed to be stuck in cement for the final 20 minutes. Penn recovered from that loss to win its next six games, though, then got its revenge in the final game of the season with a 73-48 rout of the Tigers at Jadwin as a sea of Red and Blue celebrated on the court in New Jersey. Penn traveled to Seattle for the first round of the NCAA Tournament and fell to Florida, 75-61. Michael Jordan and Paul Romanczuk were first-team All-Ivy selections.

1999-2000

21-8 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

Penn went 14-0 in the Ivy League for the first time since 1994-95 to win its 20th Ivy title. Senior captains Michael Jordan and Matt Langel were both named first-team All-Ivy, and "MJ" was named Ivy Player of the Year while freshman Ugonna Onyekwe was Ivy League Rookie of the Year. It was one of the most dominating seasons by a team in Ivy history; the Quakers had no trouble handling the Ancient Eight, winning 11 of their 14 games by double digits and seven by 20 or more. In fact, the only close games of the season came at Cornell (a 50-47 win) and at Harvard (62-61). In the first round of the 2000 NCAA Tournament, Penn fell to Illinois, 68-58, in Winston-Salem, N.C.

2001-02

25-7 Overall; 11-3 Ivy League

Penn was the Ivy's preseason favorite, but started the conference slate 2-3 before recovering to win its last nine conference games. The end of the 2002 Ivy League race provided a logistical nightmare—a three-way tie for the title between Penn, Princeton and Yale. Through a draw, it was determined that Yale and Princeton would play a playoff game, with the winner meeting the Quakers for the right to the conference's NCAA bid. The Bulldogs downed the Tigers, but had nothing left in the tank and Penn took advantage to win (77-58) in Easton, Pa. The Quakers then gave California all it could handle before falling in the first round, 82-75.

2002-03

22-6 Overall; 14-0 Ivy League

A group of six seniors looked to put a final exclamation point on their careers—and at the end of the regular season, the Red and Blue were riding a 15-game winning streak and heading to their second-straight NCAA Tournament appearance after going undefeated in the Ancient Eight for the fifth time under Head Coach Fran Dunphy. All five starters earned All-Ivy, with Ugonna Onyekwe taking home Player of the Year honors for the second-straight year and unanimous first-team All-Ivy. The Quakers took on Oklahoma State in the NCAA first round in Boston; unfortunately, they could not catch a hot-shooting Victor Williams and fell, 77-63.

A History of Ivy Titles

2004-05

20-9 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

Penn steeled itself for the Ivy League season with a rigorous non-conference schedule, and the result was a 4-7 record including five-straight losses heading into mid-January. However, the Quakers would only stumble one more time during the regular season—at Yale—en route to punching the nation's first NCAA Tournament ticket. Tim Begley earned Ivy League Player of the Year honors. How unusual was the 18-point loss at Yale? Consider that in the other 13 Ancient Eight games, the Quakers won 10 by double figures and never won by fewer than seven points. In the NCAA first round, Penn was bounced by Boston College, 85-65.

2005-06

20-9 Overall; 12-2 Ivy League

Penn was dominant during the first half of the Ivy campaign, defeating the other seven schools by an average of 23.1 points and trailing a total of 45 seconds in the second half (out of 140 minutes). The back half of the conference slate proved to be a little trickier—Columbia set the tone with a last-second basket that knocked the Quakers from their perch, and then Penn had to grind out wins at Cornell and at home against Harvard (in overtime). The Ivy season ended with three-straight road games, and while the Quakers escaped the first leg with the trophy in hand—after a skin-of-their-teeth 57-55 win—they were forced to overtime by both Brown and Princeton (beating the Bears, losing to the Tigers). Junior guard Ibrahim Jaaber, who led the League in scoring and steals, was the Ivy Player of the Year, while junior forward Mark Zoller joined him as a first-team All-Ivy selection.

2006-07

22-9 Overall; 13-1 Ivy League

Boasting an experienced, veteran squad led by seniors Jaaber, Zoller and center Steve Danley, the Quakers began the Ivy campaign with four-straight road games, and stumbled in the final one of those at Yale. The return home proved to be the perfect tonic—Penn won five-straight home contests in an eight-day span, all of them by at least 13 points. After surviving the road trip to Harvard and Dartmouth, beating the Big Green by just two, the Quakers came home for the return meeting with second-place Yale. By coincidence, the opportunity to clinch the title came in that game, and Penn took full advantage—the Quakers used a 24-4 run early in the game to roll to a 28-point win and set off the celebration. Jaaber was again named Ivy Player of the Year, while Zoller joined him as a first-team All-Ivy pick for the second-straight year and junior Brian Grandieri earned second-team.

Penn Men's Basketball

In 1901-02 Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton and Yale formed the Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball League (EIL). By 1955-56 Brown, Dartmouth and Penn had joined, and, in accordance with the Presidents' Agreement of 1954, the group was renamed the Ivy League. Penn's Ivy League men's basketball championships (since 1955-56) are listed in bold italics.
